OCTOBER 2015

Ministerial Musings

In the last week of September, the United States was host to Pope Francis. He has been a breath of fresh air to the Roman Catholic community and his attention to issues that are current and important has been a delight to see. However, I was reminded that what he has been saying is not new stuff. I am not sure exactly of the date, I would have to go back and look it up but I remember that around 1917, a Papal Encyclical came out warning against the idolatry of Capitalism and calling the major industrialist to task for forgetting the poor and disadvantaged. A Papal Encyclical is a document that a Pope writes on a regular basis that addresses how the church and society intersect. This pope is just a bit more socially conscious than the more recent ones. Pope Francis has as his guiding principles the philosophy and value of speaking for those lesser advantaged. In Roman Catholic language this is known as "exercising options for the poor."

Also Pope Francis speaking and writing about climate and ecological protection for the world is something that Roman Catholics and other religions have been attending to for centuries. The most popular Roman Catholic figure of course is St. Francis of Assisi. We UU's have adopted much of his philosophy to ground us in our love for the earth. In particular, the blessing of the animals is often based around St. Francis's words and acts.

But we or at least I am thrilled that Pope Francis is visiting this country, talking to so many people and visiting. I am thrilled to be reminded that we are a religiously diverse nation. One of the most delightful aspects of ministry and it has been since I started in ministry is the interfaith aspect of serving.

At Andover Newton, I get the opportunity to see many denominations come together and find a common language that transcends individual beliefs, sometimes that even transcends denominational beliefs to search together for meaning, for purpose, for compassion and most of all to work together so that religion can be a force for good in a society that is stumbling.

Pope Francis may be bringing back long held and written about theological issues, but these issues are most relevant to today.

Let's celebrate our differences, honor the ability to call on history and tradition in positive ways that help us move forward with love and the ability to be transformed and transforming agents. As one of my favorite hymn #95 states, "There is More Love Somewhere... I'm going keep on 'til I find it. There is more love somewhere." (Side note, the words and music are an African American hymn, attributed to Biko, an African activist)

Enjoy life. Rev. Susan

Debra's Doodles

Exciting News!! First Parish UU will be entering into a process to discern our mission this year. I love this kind of stuff. I really think it helps us as a faith community to have the sorts of conversations that will lead us to our shared mission. Then when we get on the other side of the process we will have a mission statement that will not only guide our aspirations but also will guide our programming and our self-evaluations. Some people kind of freak out when I mention that we might consider doing self-evaluation in our committees, groups and programs. I think they freak because they remember a time when they had some crappy job with a crappy supervisor, who did not know how to use evaluations to congratulate people for doing a great job and guide, inspire them to do better. But, I am putting the cart before the horse. The Mission Taskforce will be hosting several events and facilitating other means in which we will seek to input from the congregation members and friends for our mission. I thought Mission Taskforce sounds like super heroes or at least a movie with Tom Cruz. Be on the lookout for the Taskforce so you can put in your two cents worth.

See ya in church, Debra
